LOST HIS LEFT HAND.

LOST—PARTIALLY EMBROIDERED LUNCH cloth, Deliver to Wheeler & Wheeler, insurance, Douglas and 15th sta., and gel reward. Lost—599.3* Conductor Meets with an Acciden While Driving Tramps Off the Car. Conductor Morris Nobbs of the Union Pa sific met with a painful accident at Kearney Wednesday night, by which he lost his left hand. When the eastbound passenger train No. 1 stopped at Kearney, he attempted to put off a couple of tramps who were on one of the HORSES WINTERED. BEST OF CARE given horses both winter and summer. Ad-dress M. J. Weich, Gretna, Ngb. Mill (12) baggage cars stealing a ride. He succeeded in driving the men off, but just as the train was pulling out of the station, they resumed their place on the their place on the car. The car was one denominated as a "blind" baggage, and when the conductor discovered the men be stepped off the platform of the forward ceach and attempted to gain the platform on which they were riding. In catching hold of the rail his foot slipped, he fell partly under the car, the wheels reserved. HORSES AND COLTS FED AND CARED for during winter, $2.00 per month per head, and I guarantee the best of care. I call for and deliver stock free of charge, Write at once and I will call and see you, for I will only be 15 days gathering up horses and colts and then I will return to my ranch. Remember feed is apt to be high this winter and I got loss and tons of it on hand; native hay, millet hay, oats straw, corn fodder, corn and oats, and I want to feed it instead of hauling it to market. Address Charles Gans. South Omain, Neb. fell partly under the car, the wheels passing over the fingers of his hand. It was found necessary to ampulate the hand at the wrist Held to the District Court. Jesse James, the colored man who is alleged to have assaulted William Whalen with a knife and cut him severely on the throat, was bound over to the district court in the sum of $600. The trial in police court consumed most all of Wednesday and the greater part of yesterday.

What is more attractive than a pretty face with a fresh, bright complexion? For it, use Pozzoni's Powder.

(Copyright, 1995, by Bacheiler, Johnson & Bacheffer.)

Amid a tornado of excitement the winner waved their handkerchiefs, flourished hats were filled by a surging crowd of men, who joined in a mighty yell when the official announcement went up on the blackboard. Calm returned gradually and people talked of what they had won, or lost.

"It was a grand race," exclaimed a young man, scated in the front row on the grand stand, addressing a comrade, "and I don't begrudge what I lost. Give me a light. You must be made of wood, to be able to look at a heat like that and keep your cigar going. Two hundred out. Just my luck. The favor-ites I bet against were birds; those I backed, turned out pigs. It was always the rule.
What did you lose?"
"Pifty."
"Well; that's not so bad."

'No. The other fellow's losses never are.'
'I meant that it wasn't much." "Relatively, no. Actually, it couldn't have

"Because it was the Omega, the finis, the last rose of summer."
"As Earon Glebeel says, 'I'll be ghostet' if I understand you." 'It is very simple. I took account of stock this morning. One fifty dollar bill and some loose silver, not much. It seemed to me the while I had anything left."

"It seems to me a fifty would come handy under any circumstances."
"No, not enough of it to be of any importance. With economy, it would keep a fellow for two or three weeks, but then he would be just where he would have been if he had not had it. Others would have got all the benefit of it. And what is the use of trying to stave off the inevitable? I have simply gone to meet it—that is all."

"And now-what are you going to do?" "I don't think I have mentioned that yet, to any one. "You are welcome to all the money you "Thank you, Ross. Your proffer is kind, but I don't want any. To owe nothing and "Well, can't I join you and help? can count me in on anything short of burthat. I should dread barking my shins on slow and broad, over his big face, and he restrange furniture in the dark. And then the burglar's hours for business would be so had nothing to do with that. He simply went likely to interfere with one's social engagements. Just fancy leaving a Patriarch's ball to sally forth with a dark lantern and a jimmy."

"It is evident," replied Jack, with a smile, "that burglary will not do at all."
"Well, how does Wall street strike you?"

"Worse yet; less manly industry about it. Laughing together the young men aros and started toward an exit. Neither notices that their conversation had been listened to, with evident interest, by two ladies scated just behind them, one an elderly woman with a shrewd but kindly face and th other an exceedingly handsome girl, or that the latter, when their backs were turned, stood up looking eagerly for some one amid the bank of faces above and behind her. Had they observed her, they would have seen that she found the face she sought, gianced once toward them, and resumed her seat, with a satisfied smile. "For the land's sake!" exclaimed the older lady. "Did you ever hear of a prodigal son like that one? His last dollar! And what do you suppose he's going to do? guess. He's going home for some fatted calf. A good twisted strip of its hide is all he ought to get. I wonder who he is." "I'll tell you when the next race is over, stop to further conversation.

Miss Keturah Truefitt looked puzzled and relapsed into silence. When she zpoke again her voice was softer. "Poor young chap!" she said, meditatively. "Like as not he's had no mother's care to guide him right. He's been led astray like many. And what a pity it is; he's a handsome, manly fellow; he. Constance? "I-I didn't notice," answered the girl hesitatingly.

The loud clanging of the judges' bell, calling up the horses for the next race, put a Miss Constance Dessine spent part of the succeeding summer at Long Branch, part at Saratoga and part at Bar Harbor, not a little to the disgruntlement of Aunt Keturah Truefitt, her chaperon, who heartily disliked so much flitting about in hot weather. "I can't see what possesses you this summer. Con-stance," she protested, "unless it's the un-easy, roving spirit of your French father workin' out. He was like Noah's dove that ound no rest anywhere for its feet, only the love did go back to the ark and settle down, while he never settled anywhere, until he died. You don't take after the Truefitts; not a mite. They were always great on stayin' where the Lord put them. Your mother, Almiry, was never twenty miles from West Framingham until your father came along as you may say, and whisked her off. If that husband of hers. Victor Dessine, had had his way they'd never have stopped long mough in one place for letters to catch them up. And you are getting to be just like him. Are you looking for somebody, who may be in Dan, or Beersheha, or somewhere else?" Constance would not admit that she was. Even Amy Thorpe, her most confidential friend, could only guess from her frequent inquiries by letter, "whether the missing man had yet been found." what was the hope inspiring her unrest. Amy had not been able to tell her much about "Jack." He was a friend of her brother, Ross Thorpe, and she knew him, but that was about all. His name was John Burroughs and he had inherited, only a year or two ago, an estate of over $1,000,000 from his father. If he had spent it already he must be an awful spendthrift, but Amy did not think he was. He was in the best society, but kept out of the "fastest" and seemed rather serious and quiet. One thing certain was that he had disappeared as completely as if he had left the planet. Even Ross, who had been his "chum," had no idea what had become of

"But he must turn up somewhere during the summer," thought Constance, "and I will find him yet." But that hope was faint by the well informed.

by the time she reached Bar Harber, where Amy had been all season. Ross Thorpe, a few days later, joined his mother and sister there, having, as was his wont, wandered first to nearly all the other coast resorts. Nowhere had he seen or heard from Omaha, leaving his two little children of John Burroughs. "And," he said, "I have concluded that he must have gone to Europe, and shouted themselves hoarse. The home and as he hadn't a dellar, he must have streich and space about the judge's stand walked. Yes, that's it; he walked across."
were filled by a surging crowd of men, who young man's impecuniosity within a little over a year after inheriting a million. Not a dollar of the estate had been squandered. but all was temporarily tied up by the ma-chinations of a gang of rascals with whom Jack's father had become involved in an extensive land and mining speculation. They had trumped up a claim for an enormous amount against the Burroughs estate, and, by corruption, it was believed, had obtained a favorable decision from a lower court. But that was only the beginning, practically, of the legal fight, and until it was ended the estate might as well be at the bottom of the Dead sea, so far as any good to Jack was concerned. "As a mere matter of curiosity," remarked

Constance, "I really would like to know what has become of him."

Amy emiled knowingly.

III. When the winter season opened and Con-stance was back in New York, her hope re-vived, for she felt that if John Burroughs was in the city she must meet him somewhere, at theater, opera, ball, party, or some of the various bird and beast "shows" in which "ecciety" deigns to affect an interest Still, however, though she went everywhere she was doomed to disappointment.

One afternoon, late in spring, she and Aunt Keturah, walking up Lower Broadway from her lawyer's office, halted for a moment to look at the interesting and impressive spectacle of one of the enormous "steel-frame" office buildings in course of erection.

It was simply a stupendous cage, of ponderous columns and beams, twenty stories high.

Workmen swarmed all through it; cranes on its upper line, seemingly in the sky, dropped long wire cables to the sidewalk, where men attached to them, by chains, huge forms of

Just as the ladies stopped to gaze, one of those forms, a great steel beam, was made fast, guide lines were tied on its ends, and a signal to some one controlling a hoisting en gine, far aloft, caused the taughtening of th able. At the same instant one of the workmen, a stalwart young fellow in his shirt-sleaves, sprang nimbly on the beam, seized the cable to steady himself and was carried up with the ascending weight.

"Oh! My gracious!" exclaimed Aunt Keturah in alarm. "He will be killed! I'm sure he will!" Her excitement prevented her observing that her niece also uttered a ery and caught the lamp post beside her for fear of fainting. And Constance's emotion could hardly be wondered at. For in that young man, exposed to what in her eyes was leadly peril, she recognized John Burroughs. It seemed impossible, but it was true, she could not be mistaken. While they still gazed, with the fascination of horror, the beam reached the top of the structure, stopped, and the young man, care lessly leaping across the gap between it and the twentieth story platform, disappeared. Aunt Keturah ran across the street to a big man who seemed to be in authority, and in fact was the superintendent of construction and fairly exploded to him: "You've got to find some other way of having that work done. In the name of humanity, I protest

The superintendent, a large, deliberate, ru-minating sort of creature, stared in surprise, having not even a little idea of what she

"Don't look at me as if your mind was of tell you you've got to find some way of gettin' those beams up there without riskin' : human life on every one to keep it straight."
As he comprehended her, a smile spread, had nothing to do with that. He simply went up that way because he had business at the top of the building and that was easier than climbing nineteen flights of ladders. It was his own choice."

"His own choice!" gasped Aunt Keturah.
"Mercy! What a daredevil!"

"Not at all," answered the superintendent; "it is perfectly safe, if the man is cool and his grin good provided he accident here as."

his grip good, provided no accident happens."
While they were still talking the young man came down to them, standing on the big hook at the end of the cable, and reported to the superintendent: "No, sir. He is mistaken. That irregular beam is the wrong one. Its angle is 27 degrees. The one re-quired must have 34. The right one has not

"I wish you would ask Mr. Marcy for the number, if you can find him."

"He is up there now."
"Good. Get the number and I'll telephone to the works for it, at once.

Constance's emotion was hardly to be wondered a fore. He was not fifty feet above the sidewalk, when it was clearly apparent to those looking on that something was wrong with the holsting engine at the top of the structure. The ascent was much more rapid than usual, and its speed was momentarily accelerated. It seemed as if the engineer had lost control. Should he have done so, the inevitable result would be the hoisting of the beam to the head of the crane and the giving way of something, under continuance of the terrific atrain, with the consequent fell of the terrific strain, with the consequent fall of the beam to the street. John Burroughs realized all this as quickly as anybody else, but was not alarmed. He waited until he was sure that something had gone wrong, then gath-ered himself for a spring to one of the plat-forms as he darled up to these receives forms as he darted up by them, coolly calcu-lating what allowance he would have to make for the momentum to avoid having his brains dashed out by a beam instead of alighting on the platform beneath it. Of course, if he missed the platform or was shot beyond it into one of the vast interior chasms of the skeleton-like structure, that would be the end of him. Finally he leaped columbed a column as he flow and hours diversed. clutched a column as he flew, and hung dizzy and faint 200 feet above the pavement. At the same instant seemingly the cable hook gave way and the beam plunged downward, going with a thunderous roar through the sidewalk timbering into the deep excavation below.

That Joyful Feeling With the exhibitating sense of renewed health and strength and internal cleshilmers, which follows the use of Syrup of Figs, is unknown IT PROVED TO BE HIS RUIN

Sends Mr. Kelly Downward.

Consorting with Dark Lantern Politicians

AMBITIOUS TO BE A POLICEMAN

Broken Promises Drive Him Drink, Give Up His Job on the Streets and Desert His Family.

An ill-fated ambition to wear a police uniform, and promises of unscrupulous politicians which were made only to be broken, have driven William S. Kelly to run away to the care of strangers.

Kelly is an old soldier whom bad luck combined with a taste for liquor has brought to almost destitute circumstances. He was formerly employed in the street department. and when the blue label barrel brigade was organized, he was given a place on the force. He was earning enough money to feed and clothe his children and himself when in an evil hour he fell in with some of the recruiting officers of the dark lantern brigade, He was induced to join council No. 7 of the American Protective association, and in return for such influence as he could exert among the laboring men and old soldiers, he was promised a place on the police force.

He confided his ambition to some of his friends, by whom he was urged to stick to his blue barrel and leave politics alone. He was assured that the promise of a uniform was not made in good faith, as he was 51 years old, and could not pass the physical examination. But he declared that he had a sure thing and continued to expend his spare time and his wages in the A. P. A. cause.

When the new board came into power he was one of those who passed the civil service examination. But he was turned down by the physical tests and assured that he could not hope to have a place. He was driven to desperation and after that he drank heavily to drown his sorrows. The last day he worked was September 19, and after that he worked was September 19, and after that he laid off on the plea of sickness, but in reality on account of his potations. Tuesday Kelly disappeared and no one knows what has become of him. A letter was found in the tool house of the street department which was addressed to Al Masterman, and in which Kelly tells his story. He said:
"Deer Friend and Comrade: I know or Sun. "Dear Friend and Comrade: I knew on Sun-day that all was lost, but had not the courage to tell you. I have placed George and Lilly with a German woman who lives on Twenty-first street, three doors south of Clark. What I want you to do is to see if you cannot place them in the Soldiers' Orphan asylum, and, Al, use your influence with Mr. Asquith to give them a pair of shoes. Poor things, they are barefooted now. I could not stay and bear the disgrace after working all summer, and I am going to tramp it to some place and re-form and swear off the accursed drink. I place all confidence in you to attend to what I ask you to do, for you are the only friend that I have left.

"I did not pass the doctor. I had no pay coming to me and I owed every one, and the However, I will make a new man of myself with God's help and no one shall lose a penny. If I was only able to take my two little ones with me I would not feel so ceenly my disgrace."

This was followed with some directions in regard to a few household goods which had been left behind, and another pathetic appeal to his friend to look after his children. The children are still with the woman where he eft them and some of his friends in the o his friend to look after his children treet department are interesting themselves in an effort to have them cared for. Welly is well spoken of by those it is said that he would he if he had taken the advice of his friends and that politica stem. let politics alone.

When you add to this the fact that for every acre of land there that you cultivate nature enables you to harvest not one, but two to four crops each year, and crops that pay you all the way from $200 to $400 for each and every acre so worked, it is not strange that the people are determined to go south just as soon and just as fast as they for every acre of land there that you cultisouth just as soon and just as fast as they can get themselves in shape to do so and se-cure a home there. The abundance and profusion of the fruit that grows there and the facility with which you can sell that same fruit for cash is only equalled by the ample and sure crops that the market gardener is sure of who gives to his vegetables the same amount of attention and care that any prudent man gives to whatever business he may chance to be engaged in. Plenty of mild, refreshing showers and a generous and kindly soil make it possible in conjunction with the long mild seasons of the Orchard Homes country, to raise two, three and four crops of paying vegetables each year, and what is more, to get your cash for them.
